- The Monkey Story
A Chinese folktale, as told by my British grandfather. Bound in handmade paper and sewn in a traditional style.

Once there was a little monkey and this little monkey learned to jump. First he jumped over the Yellow River river, and that's a long way for a monkey to jump.
Then he jumped over the Yellow Sea, from China to Japan, and that's a tremendous way for a monkey to jump. And then he jumped over the Pacific Ocean from China to America, and that's a tremendous way for a
jumped all the way round the world till he came back to where he had started from.

So the little monkey looked in his pockets - you know, you know what pockets, didn't you?
Little tin-tin-tin-tin - and there was the piece of paper that he had written on the name of a monkey in Chinese.

And the Lord Buddha held up his fingers and pointed to the middle one of them, and said, "Little monkey, isn't that what you want?" And then on the middle one of the Lord Buddha's fingers was what the monkey had written. But there was place that you can't jump out of. You can't jump out of the hand of God.

- Urban Roots

A non-profit that plants trees around the city. The brochure is a folded circle with a die-cut showing the transition from buildings to trees. Plastic stencils make it possible to paint posters directly onto telephone poles instead of using paper.

- ●
- Urban Roots
Painted "poster" for telephone poles, and shirts for volunteers and supporters.

● Urban Roots

Donors receive a handpainted bottle of Skyline Sapling wine as a gift, while limited-edition pots are sold at Home Depot, with profits going to help plant trees.
